GEOFFREYS TO JOSH IN JEWISH JEOPARDY

Staten Island Advance

Published: August 26, 1996

At stake was $200 in Geoffrey Bucks in what had been an unusual activity for a day camp -- an intellectual challenge called Jewish Jeopardy.

Six semi-finalists among seventh and eighth-graders at the Jewish Community Center's Lillian Schwartz Day Camp, Sea View, squared off last week, having survived eight weekly rounds of competition.

And the winner is a lad by the name of Josh Blackman.

Although color wars is the usual way to cap a summer of softball, swimming and other physical activities, the JCC decided this year to add a cultural-educational aspect to the agenda and it proved so popular that it's sure to become a fixture, reports Ruth Lasser, JCC's director of communication.

Each week, the contestants were given packets with information about Jewish holidays, Jerusalem or Israel and quizzed Jeopardy style. In other words, they would be given an answer and would have to provide the right question.

While the preliminaries dealt with that week's packet, the finals covered all eight weeks of material.

Oh -- what, you ask, are Geoffrey Bucks? They are bills redeemable dollar-for-dollar at Toys R' Us and Kids R' Us stores. Geoffrey is a giraffe whose picture appears on each bill.
