The Naylor's Heifers

Twelve Holstein heifers make the future look bright for their owners. These northern dairy heifers are six months to two years old and were bought when babies by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Naylor of Wyandotte, Oklahoma.

Many good dairy farmers have found the best way to get replacements for the dairy herd is to raise them yourself. If you buy surplus stock from another herd owner, you might be getting some animals that are lower in production than the rest.

Mr. Naylor is shown in the picture with some of his herd which includes the six mature cows he is milking at present. The Naylors won't have to wait very long now until they will be in the milk production business in a substantial way.

There's a lot less chance your dairy herd will suffer mastitis if you dip teats in an antiseptic solution right after milking. You'll want to see that stalls are well bedded, to, and make sure lanes and barnyard are well drained.

It seems articularly fitting that the pleasant relationships we enjoy during the year should come to a climax in the spirit of goodwill and cordiality of the Christmas Season.

We count ourselves very fortunate to have your friendship and confidence. Sincerely do we wish for you a Happy Holiday-time, and a continuation of all good things for you!

Red top cane and hegari ensiled 12 years ago in a trench silo on a Caldwell County, Texas, farm still retains an excellent quality, is perfectly preserved and has much green material. That's a real record for storing silage.
